

Registering In Other Divisions of The New School

Not all courses from other divisions of The New School are available to undergraduate students from Eugene Lang College. We have therefore compiled the following information on each division as a guide for you. For information on these curricular opportunities, we also refer you to online information and catalogs for the relevant division. If registered in a course through another division, remember to inform yourself of the academic policies and regulations applicable to that division.

Parsons, The New School for Design

Parsons, The New School for Design, offers instruction in numerous fields of design, including architectural design, communication design, design management, design & technology, fashion design, fine arts, illustration, interior design, photography, product design, and an integrated design curriculum. Each semester, Parsons has courses available to undergraduate students from Lang College; and these classes are usually included in the online schedule. In general, students have access to liberal arts courses at Parsons, offered through the Art & Design History & Theory (ADHT). The ADHT electives are denoted with a "PL" prefix in the subject code, such as PLAH (Art History) or PLFS (Fashion Studies). Students are also eligible for art and design studio electives, listed under subject codes like PSAM (Art & Media) or PSDS (Design Strategies). Some courses in the first-year curriculum may also be possible to consider if space permits, such as PUFY 1020 Space/Materiality (3D), PUFY 1030 Drawing/Imaging (2D), PUFY 1040 Time (4D), and PUFY 1100/Sustainable Systems, as well as PUFY 1200-level studio electives. For these classes, students register as usual through MyNewSchool, and shouldn't require special permission from the department. Please note, however, 2000-level courses are often restricted to sophomores and juniors only.

Many studio-based courses at Parsons have restrictions due to prerequisite artistic skills, reservations for studio majors only, or simply available studio space and/or equipment. Students can nonetheless request special permission to register in courses not already cross-listed with Lang College. In order to obtain permission, please contact the home department for the course of interest, and speak with a departmental advisor. For some requests, the department might require a portfolio or brief interview to ensure the appropriate skill and/or background for the course. For departmental contact information, visit www.newschoo.edu/parsons/academic-advisors/.

Otherwise, students may register in courses through the continuing education division of Parsons. These courses are denoted with a "PC" prefix in the subject code, such as PCFA (Fine Arts) or PCDD (Digital Design). For more information, please visit www.parsons.edu/continuing_ed/courses.aspx.

Mannes College, The New School for Music

Mannes College of Music has an extension division (now called Mannes Next) with conservatory courses in instrumental and vocal performance, composition, conducting, music theory, music history, technology, and opera. In addition, private lessons may be arranged with an instructor for academic credit (fees apply). Registration in a music course is approved on the basis of available space and musical background. To participate in some performance and/or orchestra courses, students should contact Mannes Extension about auditions and/or placement interviews. If interested in private lessons, note additional fees are charged.

For more information on classes offered, visit www.newschoo.edu/mannes/continuing-education-music/. For questions, feel free to contact the extension program by telephone at (212) 580-0210, extn 4825 or by email at mannesextension@newschoo.edu. Also, Mannes College is located at 150 West 85th Street, so remember to include sufficient commute time in your weekly schedule.

The New School for Jazz & Contemporary Music

For Jazz & Contemporary Music, registration is approved on the basis of available space and experience. As most performance classes and ensembles have sequenced prerequisites and/or limited enrollments, students from other divisions are usually restricted from these performance courses. For any course not already crosslisted with Lang College, students must receive special permission from the Director of Academic Affairs, Dan Greenblatt. Please note other options are more flexible in terms of space and musical background, and therefore available to students, such as music history courses (JMUH), choral groups (JPER/Gospel Chorus), and based on placement tests, music theory courses (JCTH/Theory and JPER/Theory & Performance), and possibly some technology & business (JTBE).

The New School for Social Research

NSPE Milano, The New School for International Affairs, Management & Urban Policy

NSPE Media Studies

The New School for Social Research has courses taught in anthropology, economics, philosophy, politics, psychology, sociology and liberal studies. In addition, the Milano, The New School for International Affairs, Management & Urban Policy offers courses in international affairs, urban policy analysis, and nonprofit management. Each semester, the New School for Social Research and Milano have courses available for undergraduate students from Lang College, which are included in the online class schedule. All cross-listed graduate courses are numbered at the 4400- & 4500-level, designated with an undergraduate subject code, such as LHis (History) or LPOL (Politics). For these classes, juniors and seniors can register as usual through MyNewSchool without special permission from the instructor.

For graduate courses at NSSR not otherwise listed, juniors and seniors with the appropriate prerequisites satisfied are eligible to register only with permission from the instructor and department. Please contact the instructor for permission, and follow up by contacting the graduate student advisor for the home department offering the course, who will ensure the course is available for undergraduate enrollments. Note some courses are designated Limited Enrollment, which means enrollment in the course is prioritized for specific degree populations; undergraduate requests for these courses are often placed on a departmental waitlist. For a list of graduate student advisors by department, visit www.newschool.edu/nssr/student-advisors/.

For graduate courses at Milano not otherwise listed, juniors and seniors with the appropriate prerequisites satisfied are eligible to register only with permission from the instructor, though electives (courses not required and reserved for master's degree students) are often possible provided space permits.

Graduate courses in Media Studies (NMDS) are open to juniors seniors only if crosslisted with Lang College, or the student was accepted into the BA/MA program. Otherwise, permission from the graduate department must be expressly received to register in a graduate course through this department, and only seniors are considered.

The New School for Drama

The New School for Drama has an extension program as well, offering a range of drama and technique courses, all of which are listed under the subject code XDRU. Unless otherwise indicated however, undergraduate students cannot register in graduate MFA courses or in degree courses required for the BFA at New School for Drama.

The New School for Public Engagement

The New School for Public Engagement (NSPE) offers both credit and noncredit courses in a wide variety of disciplines such as communications, creative arts therapy, environmental studies, film studies, food studies, foreign languages, humanities, social sciences, writing, and visual and performing arts. In general, only upper-level undergraduates are permitted to register for courses in this division, with the exception of foreign language classes which are open to all students. Also, students cannot register for more than two courses per semester through NSPE. For more information about classes available, including online courses, visit www.newschool.edu/public-engagement/school-of-undergraduate-studies-subject-areas/.

Please note courses completed through NSPE are not applicable toward a major at Lang College, unless approved by the departmental chairperson. Also, please note most courses are offered for either non-credit or credit, but registration through MyNewSchool defaults to the lowest credit value (ie, 0 credits), so students must enter the appropriate value in order to receive academic credit. If you have any questions about registration in a course through NSPE, feel free to contact an academic advisor in the Lang Advising Office. As another reminder, courses from NSPE are not applicable toward the minimum requirement of 88 credits completed in residence at Lang College, with the exception of foreign languages and crosslisted courses.
