

Endangered Scholars Worldwide

Social Research was founded by a group of scholars known as the University in Exile, refugees from Nazi Europe who found a home at the New School. In each issue we publish the names and details of scholars, researchers, and students who have been threatened or imprisoned, along with ways to offer them support. We see this effort as consistent not only with our own history as a journal but with the need to call attention to the increasing and often brutal attempts to silence our colleagues around the world.

If you are aware of a scholar or student whose case you believe we should investigate, please contact us at socres@newschool.edu.

SCHOLARS AND RESEARCHERS: NEW AND CONTINUING CASES

BAHRAIN

On September 28, 2011, a military court upheld the life sentence of previously featured scholar DR. ABDUL-JALIL AL-SINGACE. Dr. al-Singace, a professor of engineering at the University of Bahrain, was sentenced to life imprisonment on June 22, 2011, on charges of training and financing a terrorist organization. He reported that he was tortured during his pre-trial detention.

Previously featured scholars from Bahrain who remain in prison include JALILA AL-SALMAN and MAHDI 'ISSA MAHDI ABU DHEEB, both board members of the Bahrain Teachers' Association, arrested on charges of "inciting hatred against the regime" and "calling to overthrow and change the regime by force" following the group's call for a

IRAN

Seven people connected to the Baha'i Institute for Higher Education have been sentenced with prison time at a trial in October 2011 following coordinated attacks on the institute in May 2011. Those sentenced include KAMRAN MORTEZAIE and VAHID MAHMOUDI, who each were sentenced to five years, and RAMIN ZIBAIE, MAHMOUD BADAIVAM, FARHAD SEDGHI, RIAZ SOBHANI, and NOUSHIN KHADEM, who each received four years. Their connections to the institute range from serving as administrators and faculty to providing financial assistance. The institute is a community-led organization founded in 1987 as a nonviolent response to the Iranian government's denial of higher education to members of the Baha'i faith, which is regarded by the authorities as an illegal cult.

A group of Kurdish cultural figures in Iran were given prison sentences of varying lengths in November 2011, according to a report from the International Campaign for Human Rights in Iran. Poet JAMAL KHANI received a two-year sentence; educator FARHAD VAKILINIA received three years; NAEEM NAJAFI, a student, received four years, and Kurdish author and scholar SAJJAD JAHANFAR received one year. All were charged with "acting against national security" through supporting Kurdish opposition groups.

Previously featured scholars from Iran who remain in prison include religious scholar AHMAD GHABEL, who reentered jail on July 31, 2011 to begin a 20-month sentence on charges of acting against the regime and national security; and DR. MOSTAFA ALAVI, an Iranian doctor and researcher sentenced to fifteen years in August 2008 for "plotting against the regime."

SYRIA

YASSIN ZIADEH, brother of human rights researcher and activist RADWAN ZIADEH, has been held incommunicado and without charge since August 30, 2011. According to a report from Scholars at Risk, Yassin Ziadeh is being wrongly held as part of the government's retaliation for his brother's research and human rights work. The family of Radwan Ziadeh, who is a visiting scholar at George Washington University and founder of the Damascus Center for Human Rights Studies, has reportedly suffered ongoing harassment since his departure from Syria in 2007 following death threats.

TURKEY

BÜSRA ERSANLI, a constitutional law expert and professor of political science at Marmara University in Istanbul, was arrested on October 28, 2011, as part of a mass operation targeting the Kurdish Communities Union (KCK). Also arrested as part of the same crackdown was academic and writer RAGIP ZARAKOLU, known for his defense of public expression and minority rights. According to their lawyers, the arrests were made in connection with lectures the two scholars gave at the Peace and Democracy Party Academy, a pro-Kurdish political organization. On November 2, 2011, Zarakolu released an open letter through his lawyer in which he stated that his arrest was “part of a campaign to intimidate all intellectuals and democrats living in Turkey and, more specifically, to isolate Kurds.”

ENDANGERED STUDENTS: NEW AND CONTINUING CASES

In response to pro-reform protests that started in February 2011, hundreds of students, researchers, and university staff have been expelled or banned from studying or working at public universities throughout the country. It remains unclear as the semester proceeds when these students and staff will be allowed to return to their studies and teaching. At least 500 students were expelled in total, including 400 from the University of Bahrain and 60 from Bahrain Polytechnic, both of which are public universities. Many of the students reported that the universities, which are ultimately overseen by the king of Bahrain, offered no opportunity to challenge or appeal their expulsion. Students who were allowed to re-enroll were required to sign an oath of loyalty to the government and the royal family, as well as a statement that they would not pursue academic matters that were not relevant to their degree.

IRAN

Women's rights and student activist SETAREH ELYASI was expelled from her university after being accused of disobedience and causing disorder in school, according to a December 2011 report from the International Campaign for Human Rights in Iran. While she had completed all of her requirements and has been awaiting her diploma since her thesis defense in 2009, she received word over the phone that university officials had declined to grade her thesis and that she has been expelled.

Student activist PAYMAN AREF was arrested on October 30, 2011, along with two others, and is currently in jail, although the official charges against him remain unclear. Aref had been released from prison just weeks earlier on October 9, 2011, after completing a one-year sentence and receiving 74 lashes on charges of “insulting the president.” After his release, Aref openly spoke out against the way the lashing was carried out and filed an official complaint with Evin Prison. According to his lawyer, the official charges remain unclear, but seem to relate to his speaking out against his punishment.

Previously featured students who remain in prison in Iran include ABDOLLAH MOMENI, a student activist and spokesman for Iran’s largest reformist student organization currently in Evin Prison; MAHDIEH GOLROO, a student activist and member of the Right to Education Council in Tehran, currently serving a sentence of two years and four months in Evin Prison on charges of “propaganda against the regime,” “congregation and mutiny,” and cooperation with the Mojahedin Khalq Organization, an outlawed political group; MAJID TAVAKOLI and BAHAREH HEDAYAT, distinguished student activists sentenced to eight-and-a-half and nine-and-a-half years, respectively, for their involvement in anti-government protests in 2009; and BEHROOZ JAVID-TEHRANI, a student activist and prisoners’ rights campaigner who was sentenced to seven years in jail in 2005. UNITED STATES

Fall 2011 witnessed an upsurge of nonviolent student protests across the country, associated in large part with the international Occupy movement, many instances of which were met with excessively violent crackdowns on the part of police and, in some cases, university administrations acting against their own students. Particularly egregious incidents of this kind include the use of pepper spray on peaceful, seated University of California, Davis, student protestors by campus police officers on November 18, 2011, as well as police in riot gear beating nonviolent University of California, Berkeley, students with batons on November 9, 2011. In both cases, the chancellors of the universities, Chancellor Linda P. B. Katehi and Robert Birgeneau, respectively, authorized the police activity. Endangered Scholars Worldwide stands in solidarity with the nonviolent student protestors and condemns the use of excessive force to silence their dissent.

GOOD NEWS: RELEASES

UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

On November 28, 2011, PROFESSOR NASSER BIN GHAITH, a lecturer in economics at the Abu Dhabi branch of the Paris-based Sorbonne University in the United Arab Emirates, was granted a presidential pardon and released after eight months of detention. He was detained on April 10, 2011, and held in an undisclosed location, after criticizing government officials for failing to make significant political reforms. The release came several weeks after a trial observer appointed by several international human rights organizations, including Amnesty International, reported that the proceedings were “grossly unfair,” had no basis in international law, and violated bin Ghaith’s freedom of expression.

VIETNAM

An appeals court has reduced by more than half the sentence of PHAM MINH HOANG, a blogger and lecturer of mathematics at Ho Chi Minh City Polytechnic Institute. He was released on January 13, 2012. Pham was sentenced on August 10, 2011, to three years in jail and three years of house arrest for belonging to Viet Tan, a banned pro-democracy group, and for publishing an anti-communist blog. While the jail sentence was significantly reduced, the court upheld the three-year house arrest, which will follow his release from prison.

Previously featured scholar TRAN KHAI THANH THUY was released from prison and deported to the United States in June 2011. She is a novelist and essayist who was arrested in October 2009 after she publicly defended six dissidents facing trial. In February 2010 she was sentenced to 42 months in prison and released early on humanitarian grounds.
