IRAN

SINCE OUR LAST ISSUE THE SITUATION IN IRAN HAS WORSENEDED. According to the International Campaign for Human Rights in Iran, over 90 students were arrested and many more suspended in order to forestall protests in the run up to National Student Day (December 7). On the day itself, Tehran police reported that they arrested 204 demonstrators. Over the following days, clashes continued at the universities, where militiamen set up impromptu occupations and violently attacked students. Chief prosecutor Gholamhossein Mohseni-Ejei was reported by Iranian news agencies to declare that “from now on, we will show no mercy toward anyone who acts against national security.”

These recent escalations come at a time when many of those arrested last June continue to languish in jail, while new arrests continue every month. KIAN TAJBAKHSH, the former New School professor and Social Research contributor for whom we organized a petition signed by 1,200 people over the summer, was sentenced to up to 15 years by a closed military tribunal on October 20 on bogus charges of “acting against national security.” He was denied the right to appeal, repeatedly denied access to his lawyer, and continues to be held in solitary confinement in Evin Prison. Since his sentencing he has also been brought before the courts on supplementary charges of espionage based on emails he wrote to Middle East specialists on the Gulf 2000 list, an open research forum that includes hundreds of academics, diplomats, and journalists.

MOHAMMED MALEKI, the former Chancellor of Tehran University, and BIJAN KHAJEPOUR-KHOUEI, an economist and Social Research contributor, both also featured in our previous issue, continue to be held in prison without charges. Dr Maleki suffers from prostate cancer, and his family and lawyer have noted a severe worsening of his health since his arrest, while Khajepour-Khouei, of whom there has been no word since his arrest, suffers from diabetes. In addition to these imprisoned scholars, SAEED LAYLAZ, an Iranian economist and a professor at Shahid Beheshti University in Tehran, was sentenced to nine years in prison on December 1, convicted of maintaining ties with foreigners and working to overthrow the government. CLOTHILDE REISS, a French graduate student who was arrested and accused of spying after taking photographs of the protests in June, remains released on bail awaiting trial.

Information current, to the best of our knowledge, as of December 10, 2009.

Other scholars featured in previous issues who remain in prison in Iran include: FARZAD KAMANGER, a Kurdish Iranian teacher sentenced to death in February 2008 on charges of “endangering national security”; DR. MOSTAFA ALAVI, an Iranian doctor and researcher sentenced to 15 years’ imprisonment in August 2008 for “plotting against the regime”; DRS. ARASH and KAMIAR ALAEI, two AIDS researchers who were sentenced to three and six years in January 2009 for “seeking to overthrow the Iranian government”; and BEHROOZ JAVID-TEHRANI, a student activist and prisoners rights campaigner arrested in 2005 for membership of an illegal organization. All of these people are being held in life-threatening conditions and need your support.

VIETNAM

On October 8, 2009, Vietnamese police arrested TRAN KHAI THANH THUY, a well-known writer, after she publicly defended six dissidents facing trial. Tran Khai Thanh Thuy has written many novels, poems, and essays and published the dissident magazine To Quoc. According to PEN, she has been under surveillance since September 2006, and has suffered harassment for her criticisms of the government. She is a member of the Union of Writers and the Club of Women Poets of Hanoi, and won the 2008 Hellman Hammet Award. She was detained as she made her way to Hai Phong to support the activists as they faced trial, and was reportedly beaten during her arrest. Tran Khai Thanh Thuy has subsequently been charged with assault, and she faces up to three years in prison. Tran Khai Thanh Thuy suffers from diabetes and tuberculosis, and there are serious concerns that her health is deteriorating in prison.

CHINA

We featured the arrest of GUO QUAN in our summer 2008 issue. Guo was arrested on May 17, 2007, apparently as a result of his articles criticizing the government response to the May 12 earthquake in Sichuan province. He was released shortly thereafter, but rearrested on November 13, 2008, on charges of “subversion of state power,” on the basis of online articles he had published and for founding the opposition China New Democracy Party. Guo is a former judge and literature professor at Nanjing Normal University. After being found guilty, Guo was sentenced on October 16, 2009, to 10 years in prison and 3 years of deprivation of political rights.

TUNISIA

MOHAMMED SOUDANI, a member of the General Union of Tunisian Students, was arrested on October 22, 2009, following a meeting with journalists three days before the presidential elections in Tunisia—a period in which several journalists, human rights, and civil society activists were harassed, physically assaulted, and detained on trumped up charges. Soudani is an active member of the General Union of Tunisian Students (UGET). He was previously arrested in June 2007 and given a six-month suspended prison sentence, and has since said that he was tortured during the 12 days in which he was detained. In the same year, he was expelled from the university because of his activism with the UGET. Following his arrest, during which he claimed to have been beaten, Soudani was detained incommunicado for almost three weeks in Mornaguia Prison, on the outskirts of the Tunisian capital of Tunis, before his family was permitted to visit him in November, 2009. Security officers informed Soudani's family of his whereabouts on November 9. Mohammed Soudani has stated that he had been arrested on October 22 by state security officers and was beaten up during the arrest. He was taken to a doctor by the security officers, who feared he had been seriously injured in the beating. After being examined and treated for minor injuries, he was then taken to Mornaguia Prison without being interrogated. Mohammed Soudani was presented before a judge on October 24, who interrogated him without the presence of his lawyer. According to Amnesty International, he was convicted on October 31 after an unfair trial, in which he had no legal representation, on charges of drunkenness, disorderly behavior, and harming public morality. He was sentenced to four months' imprisonment and he has now lodged an appeal against the sentence.

HELP SUPPORT

THE JOURNAL DONATION PROJECT

Begun in 1990 with the collapse of the Soviet Union, the Journal Donation Project (JDP), a Social Research, initiative, is an international library assistance program that assists in the rebuilding of major research and teaching libraries in countries that have fallen victim to political and economic deprivation. Through the provision of current subscriptions drawn from over 2,000 of the most important English-language scholarly, professional and current events journals, the JDP has helped to develop significant journal archives at over 300 libraries in 30 countries. The Project has grown substantially over the years, due to the generosity of donors. Gifts from individuals, families, corporate matching programs, grant-giving foundations, and others are deeply appreciated.

Donors may wish to make a one-time donation, pledge an annual gift, give in honor of or in memory of a loved one, or designate monies for a specific project/geographic location. All donations are tax deductible.
